

Abstract of the Disclosure

A method and apparatus for extruding plastic products having large cross sections, which require a correspondingly large die cross section, is described in which the cross section of the die is divided into regions of predetermined flow and separate flow streams are supplied to each region in proportion to the relative size of the flow region to the overall die cross section.

10

15